

Power of Attorney Factsheet

Whilst every care has been taken to verify the accuracy of the information in this factsheet, it is not intended to replace expert advice on the subject.

A Power of Attorney is a legal document that allows someone to make decisions for a person, if they are not able to, or no longer want to do so for themselves. The role involves a lot of power and responsibility for the person who agrees to act on someone's behalf.

Almoners support Freemasons and their families and you may encounter individuals who are representing someone (often a relative), using a Power of Attorney. This factsheet will help you to understand the different types of Power of Attorney and their purpose.

Why is Power of Attorney important?

What happens if someone is no longer able to manage their own affairs? Many people assume that their spouse will automatically be able to deal with their bank account and pensions, and make day to day decisions about their healthcare and medical treatment, but this is not the case. A Power of Attorney is a legal document where someone nominates a trusted third party to act on their behalf, and in certain circumstances to look after their financial affairs and welfare.

It is not possible to set up a Power of Attorney for someone who has already lost mental capacity. Instead, members of their family will have to apply to the Court of Protection to be appointed as their deputies.

Types of Power of Attorney

There are two main types of Power of Attorney:

Ordinary Power of Attorney

An Ordinary or General Power of Attorney (OPA) is a legal document which enables a person (called the "donor") to appoint one or more persons (known as the "attorney") to deal with their property or financial affairs. It is usually limited in its scope and is effective for a limited period of time, but it is possible to make a Power of Attorney that gives the attorney very wide powers.

An Ordinary Power of Attorney does not need to be registered with anyone, and is fully effective as soon as the donor signs it.

Lasting Power of Attorney

There are two types of Lasting Power of Attorney (LPA):

Property and Financial Affairs LPA

This type of LPA gives an attorney the power to make decisions about money and property for the donor, for example:

- managing a bank or building society account
- paying bills
- collecting benefits or a pension
- selling the donor's home

The donor can give permission for it to be used as any time after it is registered. The attorney must keep accounts and provide information on how much money has been spent.

Health and Welfare LPA

This type of LPA gives an attorney the power to make decisions about things such as:

- the donor's daily routine, for example washing, dressing, eating
- medical care
- moving into a care home
- life-sustaining treatment

It only comes into effect once the donor has lost mental capacity and is unable to make their own decisions.

Enduring Power of Attorney

The Enduring Power of Attorney (EPA) was replaced by the LPA in October 2007. However an EPA signed before 1 October 2007 should still be valid. An EPA covers decisions about property and financial affairs, and it comes into effect if the person loses mental capacity, or if they want someone to act on their behalf.
